Rebel fire kills 28 Salvadorans in helicopters

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP)—Rebel mortar fire struck one of two air force helicopters flying troops into battle Sunday, sending it careening into the other chopper and killing all 28 people in both aircraft, an army official said.

Col. Ramon Morales Ruiz told reporters who visited the battle zone in northern San Miguel province that mortar fire from leftist rebels hit one of the two U.S.-made Huey helicopters, which went out of control and crashed into the other.

One chopper exploded in mid-air and the other exploded in flames when it smashed into the ground, said Ruiz, a member of the armed forces chief of staff.

The rebels' clandestine Radio Venceremos said a guerrilla unit had ambushed the two air force helicopters while they were flying troops to the area.

A statement from the Defense Ministry made no reference to a rebel attack, saying only that the two helicopters collided at 7:30 a.m. between the towns of San Gerardo an San Luis De La Reina, about 107 miles northeast of the capital.

The crash victims were members of an airborne battalion and part of a contingent

Democrats claim Meese has questionable ethics

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Democrats plan to grill White House Counselor Edwin Meese III about allegations of political "cronyism," his personal finances and his stand on civil liberties when he testifies before Congress on his nomination as attorney general.

Although Meese's strict law-and-order stance may ultimately propel the confirmation of President Reagan's aide through the Republican-run Senate, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, charges that Meese's record is "an example of government by political 'cronyism'" and plans to pick a fight.

Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee have parceled out areas of Meese's background for investigation in preparation for the March 1-2 hearings.

Metzenbaum has had his staff looking into Meese's finances ever since he was appointed by President Reagan Jan. 23 to replace William French Smith.

Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., for example, are planning to focus on Meese's civil rights record.

Israeli jets bomb Beirut while Druse held back

BEIRUT (AP)—Israeli warplanes bombed and strafed rebel-held positions on the coast and in the Syrian-controlled central mountains Sunday, while radio reports said Lebanese troops fought off a three-pronged Druse attack at Souk el-Gharb.

The U.S. Marines were being transferred out of Beirut to ships off the coast, presidential adviser Robert McFarlane said in New York, and the Italian contingent of the Multinational Peacekeeping Force began moving its equipment to freighters in preparation for withdrawal of most of the 1,400 men starting Monday.

The military command in Tel Aviv said the targets of its air raids were Palestinian guerrilla bases near Damour, 12 miles south of Beirut along the Mediterranean coast, and at Bhamdoun and Hammana in the central mountains near the Beirut-Damascus highway.

Eight aircraft flew cover for four dive-bombing Israeli jets, and Syrian batteries in the mountains fired on, but did not hit, the attacking planes, radio reports said.

The planes made a second run at the targets only minutes after the first attack, according to the radio reports, which said the villages of Aley, Migheyteh, Doha and Aramoun also were hit. The Israeli announcement did not mention them.

The Israeli command said its targets were "terrorist" positions. And in Jerusalem before the air raids were announced, Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor warned Israel would not "let them [the Palestinians] build bases from within their [Druse] lines. I hope this message is clear to the Druse and others."

Police sources said initial casualty figures from the air raids said three people were killed and 19 wounded in the villages of Naahme and Damour. They said they expected the toll to climb.

Misunderstanding clouds USG magazine funding

By Laura Davis
Campus Correspondent

The Public Relations Committee of the Undergraduate Student Government endorsed a resolution Friday for the funding of Van Garde, a magazine that has caused considerable controversy within USG.

The conflict stems from an apparent lack of communication between the originators of the magazine and members of the Public Relations Committee. Brian Preypek, one of the originators of Van Garde, said he believed that he had received approval for funding at an unofficial meeting Tuesday. Preypek began advertising the magazine as being USG funded before the idea had reached the Public Relations Committee and the assembly. Marianne Borselle, president of USG, was not aware of the plans for the magazine, which would replace the USG News and Campus Report, until she saw it being advertised. "The proper channels were just circumvented," Borselle said.

Preypek said he did not realize there was any conflict until after

Askew is running dead last and will probably stay there

Editor's note: The following is the second part of an eight-part series on the Democratic presidential candidates.

By Chuck Lindberg
Campus Correspondent

On Sunday, the Boston Globe reported that as of February 14, only two percent of the people polled in the New Hampshire presidential primary preferred Rubin Askew, who is running ninth among the nine candidates.

A major problem in Askew's campaign is that he is almost unknown by the voters of America. Askew said he will depend on his personal appeal and striking differences on issues to make him known: "It's an old strategy...Be yourself and be different."

Askew, 54, known as "Rubin the Good" to his friends, has often been on the unpopular side of issues during his 12 years in the Florida State Legislature and his two terms as governor of that state. Experts have said because Askew knows where he stands, he'll survive nicely on the campaign trail and in Washington D.C.

"I truly believe my experience qualifies me to lead this nation during a time of transition," Askew said. "I helped lead Florida during a rapid and remarkable transition from a promising southern state into a great and growing metropolitan state of increasing international importance."

Askew's political views are straightforward: the United States must accept a role of leadership in world politics and set broad economic goals that can be perceived by the people as fair "...in order for them to feel better about their place in America."

"We are a country living in a difficult world," Askew said. "We have a very important role of leadership, but we have to get our act together economically through jobs for our people...We need national economic goals the likes of which we haven't seen since Franklin Roosevelt."

Askew is against "irresponsible" defense spending. He describes the Reagan administration's spending as "going into a Chinese restaurant and wanting everything on the menu."

Although Askew is against excessive defense spending, he is also against a nuclear freeze. "We've got to have a blend of commitment to rebuild our defensive posture, but we have to have limits."

Askew was born in Michogee, Oklahoma, the youngest of six children. His father left the family when he was born. His mother Alberta moved the family to Pensacola, Florida, where she worked as a housekeeper at the

Silence is acquiescence

The issue of a raised drinking age in Connecticut has affected not only the underage students here but also the student population as a whole on campus. The parties are different, the dorm events are different and the morale and atmosphere has altered noticeably.

Congress has now started on raising the drinking age to 21 nationally, and a surprising number of people are in favor of its passage.

Bills being sponsored by Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg of New Jersey, Sen. Richard G. Lugar of Indiana, and Rep. James J. Florio are receiving a surprising amount of support. The more straightforward bill under Lautenberg suggest that states with drinking ages below 21 would not receive federal funds for highways; it worked to get the 55-mph speed limit installed.

The second, by Lugar and Florio, recommends that the age be 21 for buying alcohol that has crossed state lines and could be applied to any establishment that sold anything that crossed state lines as well as alcohol.

The first bill might pass because the plan has worked before and people seem to favor a set national age more than the students here realize. The second bill might result in quite a few local wineries and breweries springing up in every state, but growing peanuts in-state to serve with drinks is going to be trickier. And what's a beer without a peanut? (There are those who favor raw veggies with drinks, but I'm among the crowd that doesn't. Did you ever hear a guy walk into a bar and say, "I'll have a double scotch and a cauliflowerette."?)

Columnist Ellen Goodman has said that an estimated 1,250 lives can be saved by raising the age to 21; another study by the Presidential Committee on Drunk Driving says the number is closer to 730. With the number of traffic fatalities that are alcohol-related every year estimated at 25,000, the 730 figure (about 3%) seems pretty low.

Life doesn't have calculable relative value yet, thank God, so saving even one life is an accomplishment. And even the young people that are going to be the most affected by the change if it passes appear to be in favor of it. A recent Gallup Poll showed that 58% of people in this age group favored the increase.

So, now you get married, vote, join the military service, be independent of your parents and become parents yourselves before you can legally drink in this country, assuming such attractive legislation goes through.

Before you start to wail about how much you were against the drinking age being raised this year in Connecticut, start to think about whether or not you really wanted it to go through.

You signed a petition to get high school athletic stars to come here for their education, didn't you? And signed another one to Channel 20 in Waterbury when Leave it to Beaver was temporarily taken off the air? Did you lobby at the Capitol when you had the chance to affect the result of the drinking issue, or write to your state politicians, work with UConnPirg or call the university administration to state your opinion? Did you even write one crummy letter to the editor of your school paper? Maybe you didn't because you really approved of the change.

It's a pretty fashionable stance to take right now, to approve of a 21-year-old national drinking age. When it comes up next year, you trendsetters are going to push it through. Soberly.

he began advertising Van Garde Tuesday. "I'll think that we jumped the gun a little bit. There was a lack of communication there but we didn't realize it. I'm not familiar with USG procedures and all the red tape you have to go through to get funding."

"We walked out of (the organizational meeting) under the impression that 'O.K. we've got a magazine. Let's get to work, we want to get it out as soon as possible.' So the posters went up," he said. Jason Westcott, chairman of the Public Relations Committee, which approves all funding, agreed that there was a lack of communication. "We had given them an unofficial vote of confidence that it would be funded, but it wasn't a student government motion," he said. "I could see how he was led to believe that."

Another issue creating controversy was the title of the magazine. The term Van Garde means the foremost of leading position in a trend or movement. However, "Van Garde was a term used by Lenin during the Russian Revolution," said Borselle. "The Van Garde would be the group that would break away from the borgeois, join the proletariat, and eventually overthrow the government." A publication called Van Garde which dealt with Marxist ideology, was printed during the Russian Revolution. Borselle said the advertisements of the magazine made it appear as if the USG was sponsoring a leftist magazine. "A USG newspaper should try to stay as neutral as possible because we're using students' money-eight dollars per semester- and we're trying to present all sides of an issue," she said. "Now look at the print on the advertisement saying Van Garde is underground and beyond,' Borselle said. This is not supposed to be an underground magazine. 'Breaking all the rules'. Why would a student government want to break rules? And at the bottom it has a crime figure with a machine gun and it says 'Watch it.' You have somebody getting raised up from the dead spurring on a revolution and an anti-Reagan picture. Now keeping in mind what the Van Garde is and putting all the signals together, you could figure out what the tendency of this magazine is supposed to be."

"This is not supposed to be an underground magazine. 'Breaking all the rules.' Why would a student government want to break rules ?"

Preypek, however, said he did not intend the magazine to be politically-minded, aside from the USG material it would hold.

"I think they're trying to read a little too much into it," he said. "We're not trying to say anything. The format of this magazine is just to do something different. We want to catch people's attention. There's obviously a lack of interest in a lot of events and literary things like the publications around campus. We don't have any political aspirations at all."

Preypek explained the format of the magazine, which would be a mixture of literary, art, and USG material. "I don't see our function as publicising any political view," he said. "We just want to publicise art, different ways of thinking, poetry, short stories, graphics, photography, etc..

"We want a chance to spotlight different ideas for the student body," he said. "We've got a real conservative problem on this campus. People see things that are different and see people that aren't the same as they are and they tend to turn them off. And that's really bad. We just wanted a publication that gives all different ideas, all different thoughts, all different forms of artistic expression a chance."

Friday's endorsement of the resolution to fund Van Garde was the first official step withing USG. The Public Relations Committee will seek approval from the assembly Monday.

... Askew campaign going unnoticed

San Carlos hotel to support her family. When Askew was nine years old he shined shoes to help pay bills.

Askew was student body president of Florida State University in 1951. He later became a prosecuting attorney in his home town. In 1958 he became a member of the Florida House of Representatives.

In 1970 Askew became the governor of Florida. One of his first accomplishments was getting a bill passed giving Florida a state corporate income tax. He also managed to push a water and land management act and strict financial disclosure statutes.

Askew helped change the image of Florida as being a bigoted state. He appointed minorities to cabinet positions, judgeships and other government positions. Askew is most well known for his outspoken opposition to racial integration in schools through busing.

"I had to send a message to school superintendents that we were going to obey the law," Askew said. "Busing, certainly, is an artificial instrument of change."

The only stain on Askew's career as governor was the attempt to have his lieutenant governor, Tom Adams, impeached. Adams had hired 46 people to government jobs which were already filled, apparently using them to work on his dairy farm. The vote for impeachment fell short by 17 votes. Adams was then censored by the legislature.

After two terms as governor, Askew spent one year as President Carter's trade representative and then as chief spokesman on international trade and investment.

Mailbox kept from Jungle

By Lin Moores
Staff Writer

The mailbox on No. Eagleville Rd. in front of the Jungle, removed because of vandalism last October has not been replaced, even though it is repaired.

Postmaster John Flanagan said that, though "I have it sitting in back,' the box will not be returned until next fall. Early last November, a post office spokesman said the box would be replaced when it was repaired, or at the latest, by this semester.

Flanagan, who became post master here in mid-November, said he did not know the history of the box until a few weeks ago.

The box was vandalized twice last semester. The second time the door was kicked in and the box was taken out so the door could be replaced.

Now that Flanagan knows about the box, he said that since boxes on campus are removed when students leave, putting the box back up for the time until the end of the semester is not worth while.

Flanagan said that the priority of the post office is to secure the mail, and if, in his opinion, the mail won't be secure, a mailbox will not be put up.

According to Flanagan, original decisions about this mail box were made by the old post master.

Mansfield man arrested for field house thefts

By Chris Istvan
Staff Writer

A Mansfield man was arrested and charged with larceny last week for breaking into lockers at the field house, according to UConn police.

Lieutenant McKelvey said Robert J. Dibella, 19, of 720 Warrenville Road, was first apprehended for breaking into lockers at Eastern Connecticut State University. "I don't know what the charges (at Eastern) were," he said.

Dibella was charged by UConn police with six counts of larceny and three counts of credit card theft, McKelvey said.

McKelvey said Dibella was using an electronic surveilance device to break into the lockers.

Dibella was released on a $500 bond and his court date is on February 28.

By Nancy Rank
Campus Correspondent

Forty couples tested their endurance over the weekend by dancing for 24 hours in the third annual Multiple Sclerosis Dance Marathon held in the ROTC Hangar Friday and Saturday.

Of the 40 couples who began dancing Friday night, 38 made it to the end, netting over $10,000. The money will be used for research on the national level and medical assistance on the local level, aiding people in the community who have the disease.

Last year, 29 couples finished. Members of the Alpha Pni Omega fraternity, sponsors and organizers of the event, hope the marathon will become a tradition at the university.

"People enter the marathon with their own individual reasons, either because they know someone with MS, or it's the challenge of the marathon, or they've never done it before," said Chip Darius, vice president of the fraternity and chairman of the marathon committee. "But throughout the 24 hours the dancers develop a closeness and by the end, the dance is for one cause: to help fight multiple sclerosis."

Editor's Note: Tomorrow's Features section will contain a more detailed article about the Dance Marathon.

...Meese

Metzenbaum plans to query Meese about $483,000 in personal loans and the appointment to government positions of people connected to some of the loans, said Roy Meyers, aide to Metzenbaum.

"We are not charging illegalities, but we are interested in questioning him on the circumstances," Meyers said.

In particular, Meyers said, the Ohio senator intends to look into whether Meese has repaid two loans totalling $60,000 that had been arranged for Meese by his tax advisor, John R. McKean.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, had investigated the loans to determine whether there was any connection between them and the appointment shortly thereafter of McKean to a $10,000 post on the U.S. Postal Service Board of Governors. Both men denied such a link.

The GAO suspended its inquiry last year, having found that there was "no wrongdoing" and after receiving assurances that Meese was in the process of securing a commercial mortgage on his McLean, VA., home to repay the loans arranged by McKean.

Democrats target Central American policy

WASHINGTON (AP)—Democratic lawmakers are likely to shift their focus of attack on President Reagan's foreign policies from Lebanon to Central America as Congress returns Monday from a 10-day recess.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz gets a chance to defend the Reagan policies this week as he testifies on behalf of the administration's new military and economic aid proposals for El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua.

Reagan sent Congress on Friday a package providing $8.9 billion in aid for Central America over five years and asked the lawmakers to give it their "urgent attention."

The Reagan proposals embraced the aid recommendations of the bipartisan commission headed by former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and are intended to stem leftist advances in the region. The package includes $17.6 million for El Salvador for the rest of fiscal 1984 and larger amounts later.

At issue in Shultz's testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is how much the U.S.-supported government in El Salvador should be pressed to improve its human rights policies.

But Reagan, in a split with the commission, urged that the White House retain the power to decide if El Salvador had made enough human rights progress to deserve continued military assistance.

The Democrat-controlled House Foreign Affairs Committee also called on administration officials to explain Reagan's Central American policies, including allegations that the United States is building permanent military bases in Honduras as part of its efforts to defeat leftist guerillas in El Salvador and support insurgents seeking to overthrow the Marxist government in Nicaragua.

Congress gave the administration $20 million less than it requested last year and linked some of that assistance to the long-delayed prosecution of El Salvadorian National Guard officials accused of murdering four U.S. churchwomen.

Before the recess, there was intense pressure in the House and Senate for a rapid pullout of the 1,500 U.S. Marines from Lebanon.

The ministry statement said four of the dead were pilots and the others were troops. There was no indication that any of the victims were foreign.

An official at the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said no Americans were on board the helicopters. The United States provides aid and military advisers to El Salvador to support its fight against leftist guerrillas.

The Salvadoran military has a fleet of about 20 Hueys.

A military officer in Cabanas province said an additional 1,000 soldiers left the provincial capital of Sensutepeque in trucks Sunday to reinforce the troops fighting in San Miguel.

The officer, who insisted on anonymity, said there was heavy fighting Sunday morning in the area around Nuevo Eden De San Juan, about 10 miles west of where the helicopters collided.

...Israeli warplanes

Police sources said initial casualty figures from the air raids said three people were killed and 19 wounded in the villages of Naahme and Damour. They said they expected the toll to climb.

The raids followed an attack on an Israeli patrol earlier in the day in Sidon, south of the Israelis' Awali River frontline in southern Lebanon. The state radio said "a few" Israelis were wounded in the attack.

At Souk el-Gharb, the government fought off Druse attacks from nearby Aitat, Kaifoun and Aley, according to a report from the rightist Christian Voice of Lebanon. The radio report said the army scored direct hits, causing heavy casualties among the attackers.

In southern Lebanon, Christians and Moslems clashed in Jiye, Saadiyat and a string of nearby villages. Explosions from the fighting could be heard nine miles away in Sidon. Christian Phalange militiamen were driven into that area from the coastal town of Damour by Druse and Shiite fighters last week.

Newington feels effect from engine war

NEWINGTON (AP)—Pratt & Whitney's smaller-than-expected Pentagon jet engine contract could hurt more than the town of East Hartford, where the jet engine maker is located.

Two towns away, Newington officials are worried about the contract's effect on their own town economy. Many of the town's largest industries depend heavily on making parts and machinery for Pratt and Whitney.

"There's no question there will be a long-term effect that will be detrimental to us," said Arthur A. Weigel, vice president of Atlantic Machine Tool Works Inc., Newington's largest taxpayer.

Town manger Peter M. Curry said he believes Newington has a higher percentage of its workforce involved in manufacturing subcontracted goods for Pratt & Whitney than any other Harford-area community.

Those companies include three of the town's six largest taxpayers and three others among the top 40. They also include companies that have been expanding operations in town,

For instance, Atlantic employs several hundred people to manufacture discs and other engine components for Pratt & Whitney. Those components account for 75 percent of Atlantic's business.

When the Pentagon announced that General Electric would receive 75 percent of next year's jet engine contract, Newington officials knew it would hurt the town's economy.

"What we have to do is redirect ourselves," said Frank Romeo Jr., the town's development commission chairman. "We have to go after another type of business. We've got to be flexible enough to change."

Most of the affected companies have supported Pratt & Whitney for years.

In addition to Atlantic, other companies include the Fafnir Bearing Division of Textron Inc., Newington's second-largest taxpayer; Caval Tool & Machine Co., the sixth highest; Products Design & Manufacturing Corp.; Reno Machine Co; and the National Welding and Manufacturing Co.

Iowa Poll gives Mondale big lead, but Glenn is still 'out to win' race

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP)—Walter F. Mondale's prospects for a strong showing in the Iowa precinct caucuses were heightened Sunday by a state poll saying he is far ahead of his Democratic presidential rivals, but Sen. John Glenn said, "I'm still out to win this thing."

However, the latest Iowa poll said Glenn's support has slipped and the battle for second place was a virtual tie among Glenn, Sen. Alan Cranston of California and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado.

In an appearance on the CBS program Face the Nation, Glenn said, "The polls go up and down: They're very volatile and the polls have shown all the way through there are a lot of people still undecided."

Cranston said, "I don't think it [the poll] can be taken too seriously." The California senator said there is "a passion gap" in Mondale's support.

Don Foley, a spokesman for the Mondale campaign, also was reluctant to give too much weight to the survey published in the Des Moines Register.

"The poll is obviously encouraging," said Foley, adding that "the campaign is not in a position to let down its guard."

Foley said the Mondale campaign was contacting thousands of Democrats to urge them to attend the caucuses. Other campaigns were making similar, though smaller scale, attempts to get their supporters to the precinct meetings, which will be the first public test of strength in the Democratic campaign.

The Iowa poll said that among Democrats who definitely plan to attend Monday's precinct caucuses, 44 percent support Mondale. Conducted by telephone Feb. 12-16, the survey also found 17 percent backing Cranston, 14 percent Hart; and 11 percent Glenn. Former Sen. George McGovern was at 7 percent and the Rev. Jesse Jackson at 4.

But of the Democrats interviewed, only 66 said they definitely would attend the caucuses, so the findings had a potential sampling error of plus or minus 12 points.

About 15 percent of all Iowa Democrats said they will definitely attend the caucuses, or perhaps 90,000.

A month ago, the Iowa poll of people who said they would attend the caucuses gave Mondale 35 percent, Glenn 14, McGovern 11, Hart, Cranston and Jackson 9 each.

While the Democrats were winding up their caucus campaigning, Iowa Republicans were preparing for a Monday visit by President Reagan, who had stops scheduled in Waterloo and Des Moines.

Reagan has no competition for the support of people who attend GOP precinct caucuses.

Jackson also appeared on Meet the Nation, and criticized the Democratic Party leadership as "timid and cowardly, following opinion polls."

Hart, interviewed on NBC's Meet the Press, said his recent sharp criticism of Mondale was an attempt to respond "to the question of how are you different from former Vice President Mondale."

David Bowie came into my living room last Friday night. He HBO'd his way right through my TV set as the cable channel presented excerpts from his Serious Moonlight tour. For those who were not fortunate enough to catch him on his world tour last summer, this is a great collage of concert footage from two different shows.

"You know who I am he said" were the first lines of "Look Back in Anger." Yes, the crowd answered back, we know who you are. To check their credentials, he dipped into his bag and pulled out the tragic love song "Heroes" and "Golden Years." The crowd knew their stuff and answered back with approval. The band was set and the show began.

The program could very well have been a highlight film of Bowie's two-date engagement in Hartford last July. Sure, they didn't catch every moment, but how can you squeeze a two and one-half hour show into a one hour capsule? Director David Mallett did capture some of the more powerful scenes that comprise a Bowie concert. It seemed that more than a dozen cameras were used to get different perspectives. Zoom lens shots and fade aways, from deep in the coliseum, were mixed together in clear sequences.

The computerized light show and shower-curtain columns which adorned the stage were as impressive as they had been in person. The best shots, however, were those that caught Bowie as he swaggered across the stage. His little dance which segued "Fashion" and "Let's Dance" did not go unnoticed by the breakdance-conscious crowd.

One unique feature was how the film was constructed. The editors inserted a still-shot photo before each song with its title and date of release. The resulting patchwork of songs was streamlined into one cohesive effort. However, any any one of them could have stood on its own as a video for MTV.

As mentioned before, the film was composed of two shows. During one, Bowie wore a baggy, pleated suit with a silk tie. Suspenders, leather shoes and a wristwatch completed the outfit for the former glam-rock king. His support band was atttired in Egyptian, Indian and 1940s gangster style clothing. They include Carlos Alomar, Earl Slick and the Simms Brothers, who are Connecticut natives.

"Fame" was the last song (he co-wrote it with John Lennon) and the camera angles captured Bowie's magic on stage. His interactions with the audience and his band were very evident. Now that he is through with drugs, you don't have any difficulty seeing why he's smiling so much on stage. He really seemed to be enjoying himself. Serious Moonlight has only one drawback; you wish it went on twice as long.

Tacuma stops show

By Neil Jones

Jamaaladeen Ta cuma
Showstopper
Gramavision

After what Herbie Hancock did to this kind of pop jazz funk dance music, I was a little bit leery about putting the needle to this one. OK, "Rockit" was a catchy dance song and cool scratching on it but still... Anyway that's off the point. The point is that Jamaaladeen Tacuma has found a comfortable combination of jazz and dance music circa 1983, somewhere in New York. Corrolaries to this point include the fact that Julius Hemphill and Olu Dara contribute some of the hottest reed work, in this kind of ensemble, that I have heard in a long time. As added bonuses, Ornette Coleman contributes a song for solo bass and James Blood Ulmer fires up his guitar.

The first side of Showstopper is a large ensemble reading of some urban avant-funk with much dance capability. However, the second side leans more to the harmolodic jazz of Coleman's Prime Time. The size of Tacuma's band on this side varies from cut to cut. Notable cuts: Showstopper, the tune where the two reedsmiths get their moments and "Tacuma", which is that Coleman tune for solo bass.

Really, this album is breathtaking at times and if you enjoy free jazz in the style of the Decoding Society and the Golden Palaminos then this album will make your feet move and your mind reel.

If you don't, well I guess you should go buy another copy of the "Karma Chameleon" single or something.

Study abroad is worthwhile

By Laurie Beth Roberts
Campus Correspondent

Looking for an experience that will change your life and will earn you college credit at the same time?

That's quite a sales pitch, but every word of it is true. Ask anyone who has studied in a foreign country.

At the university, fourteen programs are offered to students looking for a diversion from four years at the Storrs campus. If fourteen aren't enough, the Study Abroad office can help students find a program sponsored by another U.S. college or university that may interest them.

The programs offered by UConn are sponsored by the academic departments that have an interest in sending students abroad to study. So it's no surprise that almost half of the UConn programs stem from the language department.

"The whole idea of studying abroad was started by the language department so the students could get practice speaking the language they were learning," said Sally Innis-Klitz, study abroad advisor at UConn.

And it was Oliver Andrews, a professor of French, who began a program seventeen years ago for UConn students to study in France. "He's considered the father of the UConn study abroad programs" she said. "His program was the result of a personal, individual contact he had with a foreign institution. That's how most of the programs have started over the years."

Along with the program to France, the language department also sponsors or co-sponsors programs to Italy, Austria, Germany, Mexico, and Spain. But Innis-Klitz said that it is difficult to make generalizations about any of the programs. "Each program is different in arrangements," she said.

And that goes for the eight other UConn programs: to Egypt; Essex and London, England; Israel; the Netherlands; Nova Scotia; Quebec; the U.S.S.R.; and the summer program to Poland.

For example, the program sponsored by the School of Business and the economics department at Tilburg University in the Netherlands, is only offered for the fall semester. "UConn students go over for the fall to study a fixed curriculum. They are enrolled at Tilburg and live in the dorms there, but are in special classes taught in English," Innis-Klitz said. "We got the idea for this program from Indiana University, who sends their students over for the spring semester."

The cost for one semester in the Netherlands is $3000 for an in-state student and an additional $1,260 for an out-of-state student. This price includes tuition and fees at Tilburg, housing, and travel expenses to Tilburg, but doesn't include books, meals, and other personal expenses.

But Innis-Klitz doesn't recommend just a semester for the other students who come to her for information and advice. "I prefer that students go for the entire year if they can afford it and fit it into their academic schedules. A semester is such a short time and a student is just getting to know the city and the culture, and then it is time to leave," she said.

When a student comes to the Study Abroad Office, Innis-Klitz must inquire about the student's major and requirements for graduation. She must also know the student's interests and objectives in going abroad. UConn's programs, sponsored either exclusively by the university or in consortium with other institutions, offer courses in liberal arts and sciences, electrical engineering and computer science, (at the University of Essex in England); English, and history (at Bedford College in London); art (at the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design), and business (at Tilburg). These are all in addition to the credits offered in other programs for language students.

The cost for spending a year in a foreign country through a UConn program is roughly equivalent to the cost of studying in Storrs.

"What's good about studying in a program offered by UConn or another U.S. school is that students are still eligible for financial aid," said Innis-Klitz. "When a student applies directly to a foreign school, he becomes ineligible for aid, and that can make studying abroad very expensive."

And what's even better about studying on a program that is sponsored by UConn is that the student doesn't have to worry about transferring financial aid or credits through another sponsoring institution. "Their credits will go directly on to their transcripts, just as if the courses had been taken here at UConn," she said.

If students are interested in applying to study abroad for the 1984-1985 academic year, now's the time, because most applications are due by the middle of the semester before the student goes abroad. "The students going to France were selected last fall, but for most of the programs, applications are due some time in March," Innis-Klitz said.

Study abroad relatively inexpensive

Acceptance criteria for studying abroad varies as much as the arrangements for the programs. The range in acceptable grade point averages goes from a 2.7 to a 2.3, depending on the program.

Each student who applies to go abroad must fill out an application, including a section that verifies that a student has had language training if knowledge of a language is required for the program; obtain references from professors; and have an interview with a selection committee. Each sponsoring academic department has its own selection committee and criteria by which the students are selected.

About 150 students from UConn study abroad each year. And the number doesn't include students that enroll directly with foreign institutions because they do not go through the Study Abroad Office.

"Fifteen months ago this office didn't even exist and no one person could identify all of our study abroad programs because each was handled by the individual departments," Innis-Klitz said. "So I got the job of defining the 'UConn Study Abroad Programs'."

And after one year, Innis-Klitz, who is also a program specialist for the university's Office for International Education and Development, has these programs well defined and is willing to answer any questions a student might have about studying abroad.

But there is one thing she regrets about this job. "I don't usually hear from the students while they are there or after they get back unless there is something that went drastically wrong," she said. "I would just like it if they sent me a letter telling me their reaction to the experience, because that is the only way I have of knowing what could be changed to make the programs even better."

Twelve-goal barrage gives hockey team easy 15-5 win

By Jim Acton
Staff Writer

UConn hockey fans were treated to a wild, hard hitting game Friday as the Huskies routed visiting Fairfield 15-5. Eleven different UConn skaters scored goals to improve their record to 13-13 on the season.

After a relatively close first period, the Huskies scored 12 goals in the final two stanzas to seal the victory. Mike Anthony, Brian Hitchings, Bob Falvey, and Mark Kosinski all had two goals apiece, while Bruce Marshall added four assists to the winning effort.

The game was marred by a fight that occured at 7:22 of the third period involving Fairfield's Tom Festa and various Husky skaters. Festa began shouting at the UConn bench after his cousin Steve was flattened on play along the boards.

Tom Festa skated alongside the Husky bench again, this time throwing punches. Festa's heroics of trying to take on the entire UConn team were soon joined by a few of his teammates before the referees could bring things under control. The rest of the game was played without incident.

Hitchings started the scoring for the Huskies four minutes into the game and again 16 minutes later. After the first 20 minutes, the game was all UConn. Fairfield could only manage four more goals, including two from Jim Keegan.

. . .Huskies impressive

From back page

No one can expect a repeat of the Huskies performance on Saturday after just one day's rest. But the team certainly won back the hearts of many fans disillusioned by its other Big East losses with its supereffort.

HUSKY NOTES: The game will be broadcast on Channel 20 and WHUS (91.7 FM)...Six players fouled out in the contest Saturday...Kelley is questionable for the game tonight ...Ray Broxton scored a basket with five seconds remaining in regulation to send the game into overtime...Hobbs made just one of 12 from the floor.

. . .Coleman unchallenged

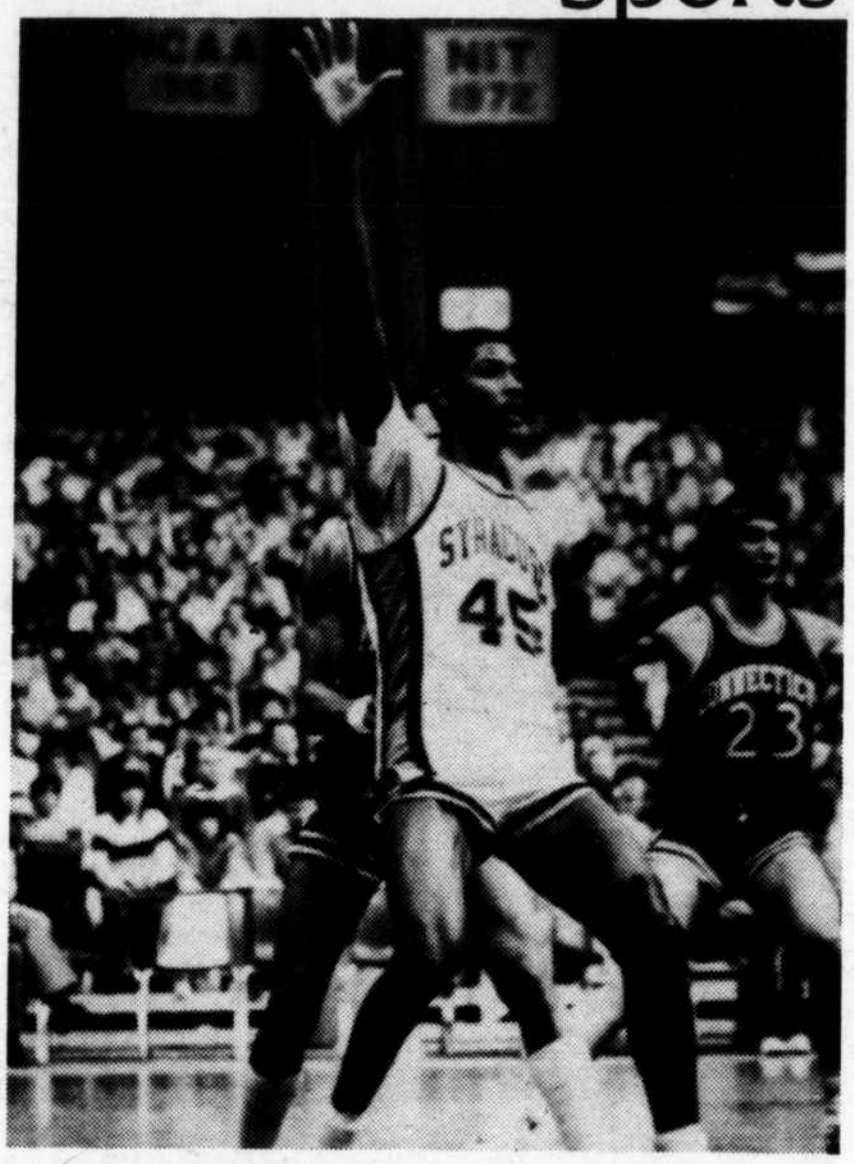
UConn goalfender Jamie Coleman was never really challenged, turning back 28 shots. Steve Donovan of Fairfield, was not so lucky, however, stopping 21 shots while letting 15 go in. Coleman is now 4-2 for the season.

Things got a little out of control for the Stags late in the game as Donovan became a shooting target for the Huskies. UConn scored four goals in five minutes to end the game as Mike Anthony tallied two in the closing stanza.

With the win, the Huskies reach the .500 mark for only the second time this season. Fairfield drops to 8-11-2 on the season. The game does not affect the Huskies standing in the ECAC because Fairfield is a Division III team.

However, the game did help various UConn players add to their already impressive records. Seniors Brian Hitchings and Ken Hunt lead the team in points with 46 and 43 points respectively, while Hitchings scored his 20th goal and Hunt scored his 19th. Linemate Mike Anthony now has 39 points, 18 goals and 23 assists.

The Huskies are in action again Tuesday on the road against New England College. They return home for their season finale on Saturday against St. Anselm.



Wendell Alexis in action against the Huskies last season. Alexis scored 14 points Saturday.

Blown lead gives Iona 60-55 victory

NEW ROCHELLE, NY—Iona scored the final 10 points of the game to wipe out a one-point UConn lead and register a 60-55 women's basketball victory over the Huskies Saturday night. It was the 10th straight setback for the Huskies, who now own an 8-17 record, compared to 6-15 for the victors.

Leading scorer for Iona was Emily Mojica with 23 points, while Peggy Walsh led the Husky effort with 14.

Huskies lose in triple overtime, but gain respect

By Dana Gauruder, Bill Hisey, and the Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—The biggest win of the season for the basketball team was also its most heartbreaking loss.

In one of the most exciting games in recent years, UConn fell 87-85 to Syracuse in triple overtime at the Carrier Dome. Junior Vicente Ithier's eight-foot shot in the final overtime assured Syracuse of its 17th win of the season.

It was UConn, though, that won the game everywhere but the scoreboard. The Huskies were dismissed as 11 point underdogs going in the game. They had only one win in their last six games. They were playing without their scoring leader, Earl Kelley. And they had been blown out by the Orangemen 95-68 in Hartford earlier in the year.

Yet the Huskies, who face Providence tonight at home, played the 16th-ranked team in the nation evenly in its home building. Ironically, it was free-throw shooting that kept UConn in the game. UConn has struggled from the line this year, yet twice the Huskies sank clutch free throws with no time remaining to send the game to another overtime.

Larry Blucher, who has been used sparingly this year, though he had won the game when he made a pair of free throws after the first overtime despite the roar of 29,254 hostile fans. Blucher went to the bench and hugged head coach Dom Perno, only to be told to get back in the huddle because the game was still tied at 77-77.

Senior Vern Giscombe, who recorded a career high 24 points, recreated the same feat five minutes later to send the game to a third overtime. Like Blucher, he successfully blocked out the screams of the huge crowd.

"I was just concentrating on the shot," said the senior guard, who played the entire game. "It comes with experience. I try to reach for some type of tunnel vision, shut out the noise and just concentrate. I wanted to fulfill my dream and shut the crowd up at that moment."

The Huskies, however, fell behind by seven in the next overtime. UConn came back after Syracuse missed three one-and-ones to pull within one, but couldn't make the final shot. The play by Ithier was originally designed for point guard Karl Hobbs, who was to drive the baseline. He, however, was well-guarded.

Hockey team rolls over Fairfield - page 9

Sophomore forward Eddie Williams scored 20 points in one of his finest efforts of the season for UConn, while Syracuse countered with a balanced attack. Six players scored in double figures for the Orangemen, led by Wendell Alexis with 14 points.

"These kids never died," Perno said. "They can walk down Main Street with their heads held up high."

Hobbs, who played 54 minutes, managed to hold freshman sensation Dwayne Washington to 13 points and forced him into six turnovers. "I expected a good game, but I didn't expect them to take the game to us," Washington said.

The loss kept the Huskies in eighth place in the conference with a 4-9 record. UConn can get out of that spot tonight with a win over sixth-place Providence. See page 10

Finish 1-2 in slalom:

Mahres grand in Olympic finale

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP)—As snow fell on this Balkan city on the final day of the 14th Winter Olympics, two American flags were raised at the last ceremonies. It was a victorious moment, and it turned the Games into a winter wonderland for the U.S. team and twins on skis.

The gold medal draped around Phil Mahre's neck for winning the men's slalom still was only the second-best moment of his day. His wife gave birth in Arizona to a son just before he was making his first run down Mount Bjelasnica. He found out about it after he had won the gold, and walked away in tears.

Phil's brother, Steve, took the silver, just .21 seconds off his brother's pace. The bronze was won by Didier Bowvet of France.

It capped a day when the Soviet Union, which won the total medals race with 25, took the gold medal it lost in hockey in 1980; when Sweden's Thomas Wassberg won the gold in the men's 50-kilometer cross-country in hockey; when athletes gathered at the Zetra rink in the closing ceremony to say goodbye to Sarajevo.

The United States athletes' did not match their total medals performance of 12 in 1980.

Five U.S. medals-three of four golds, and two of four silvers-came in Alpine events, a shocking development for a ski team that had played second best to Europeans for year ".

For the first four days of the Games, the U.S. medal well ran dry. The hockey team quickly became misery on ice, losing two straight and losing any chance for a repeat of the 1980 dream.

There were no medals in speed skating, where the Heiden brother-and-sister team had won six four years ago, five by Eric and one by Beth. That winless streak remained intact.

Finally, the Carruthers brother-sister ice dancing team from Wilmington, Del., cracked the ice, winning the silver medal.

Gold in ice dancing went to a British pair, Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean for a golden performance. They had a total of 19 percent 6.0's over three separate days of dancing, 12 in their free style finale. For artistic impression, they lit the board with nine straight 6.0's, perhaps the best single performance of the Games.

The following day, Debbie Armstrong and Christin Cooper gave the United States the gold and silver in the women's giant slalom. It was the first U.S. gold medal. American flags waved, Armstrong and Cooper clenched their fists in joy and President Reagan called.

Two days later, Bill Johnson won the downhill skiing event as he predicted, giving Americans their first men's Alpine gold and first medal of any kind in the downhill.

That night, Scott Hamilton won the gold medal in men's figures. He reached the mountaintop of his career, but once there baked both in glory and disappointment. He was pleased with the gold, but let down by his performance, for which he apologized.

Women's track team takes 2nd in Big East

Led by the all-around performance of senior Deanna Michaels and sophomore Frederica Jones the women's track team finished second to Villanova in the Big East Indoor Track Championships at Syracuse, N.Y. this weekend. UConn also swept the triple jump as junior Ann Gaffney set a meet record of 36' 10½" in the event.

The men's indoor track team ended up a disappointing eighth out of nine teams in the Championships, which were held at the Carrier Dome. The Huskies had come into the meet undefeated. Seton Hall edged out Villanova for the men's championship.

In the women's competition, Michaels finished in the top three in three events. Michaels was second in the triple jump to Gaffney, and third in the high jump and the 300 meters. Jones took second in the long jump and the 400 meters. Both UConn performers were also on the 4 x 400 meter relay squad which came in third. The women Huskies' had entered the competition with just one loss for the year.

UConn had 99 points overall, well ahead of third place St. John's which had 72 points. Villanova won the Big East crown with a whopping 164 points.

The Villanova women finished first in seven different events, including two victories by Lauren Searby. Villanova led after the first day of competition on Saturday and never relinquished the advantage while the Huskies moved up from fourth on Sunday.

For the men's track team, only three performers were able to garner a top three finish. John Whitehead took second in the pole vault while Mike Garfinkel and Andy Lombardi were second and third in the 35 lb. weight throw. Seton Hall excelled in the running events to take home the crown.
